November 2023

Remembrance Day 2023

We honour and remember the Canadian Armed Forces and civilians who serve and have served in times of war, conflict, and peace.

We thank those who made the ultimate sacrifice, for defending the values that we hold dear.

The Nursing Sisters of Canada

Military nursing had its beginnings in the Crimean War, although the tradition of alleviating the sufferings of soldiers is an old one. The organizing of battle nursing and the dispatch of women as nurses, begun by Florence Nightingale for the British, soon found its way to Canada.

It was in 1885 when Canada's Nursing Sisters first took to the field, providing care to the Canadian troops sent to put down the North-West Rebellion. From the North-West Rebellion onward, Nursing Sisters joined every military force sent out by Canada, from the South African War to the Korean War. Although the nurses in Canada's military are no longer referred to as Nursing Sisters, their contributions have continued into the activities and missions of the present-day Canadian Armed Forces.

Over the years, the devotion and efficiency of Canada's military nurses have earned them a very high reputation among the troops with whom they served and to whom they ministered.
